To Receive Its

Special Citation

At the Cathedral Stoneworks yard, car-sized boulders were routinely transformed into the slabs, blocks, capitals and finials that clad our buildings and decorate our city. The significance of this enterprise included accomplishments of artistic, technological, and human dimensions. The artisans sustaining ancient traditions of craftsmanship worked alongside CADD stations connected to automatic cutting machines. The business that became a competitive source of building stone to a national market initiated an outreach program to employ and train local youths. The Chapter celebrates the accomplishments of the Cathedral Stoneworks, and commends their talents, their resourcefulness, and their contribution to New York.
